Executive summary

The Asser Institute, an internationally renowned centre for international and European law established in 1965, conducts fundamental and independent policy-oriented research and actively disseminates its knowledge through publications and events such as training programmes, conferences, and public lectures. These events include an annual training programme on disarmament and non-proliferation of weapons of mass destruction. This intensive, week-long programme, co-organised with the Organisation on the Prohibition of Chemical Weapons (OPCW), brings together prominent experts and practitioners in the field and is aimed at early- to mid-career professionals working for governments/national authorities, NGOs, or think tanks focusing on WMD-related issues. It equips them with in-depth knowledge of the diplomatic, legal, and technical aspects of disarmament and non-proliferation, insight into the work of key professionals in the field, and unique networking opportunities with speakers and participants from diverse backgrounds.
